

BANK SCANDAL INVOLVES STATE DEPARTMENT

Examiner Judson Said to Have Borrowed $1,000 Before Crash.

$50,000 STATE FUNDS.

Comptroller Gilman, Vice-President of Cooper Exchange, Got Deposit.

DRAFTS DATED AHEAD.

Institution Permitted to Remain Open While Unsound, It Is Asserted.

From developments to-day, it is expected that within a few days an investigation will be started into the workings of the State Banking Department that may involve prominent insurance men, as well as State Bank Examiner A. C. Judson. Judson is said to have borrowed $1,000 from the Cooper Exchange Bank that was closed last October. The bank is said to have been unsound for a long time previous. It was located at Avenue A and Second street.

Theodore P. Gilman, former State Comptroller, was appointed a vice-president at $2,000 a year. Gilman is said to have put into the bank $50,000 of State funds. That amount was sent to the bank, it is asserted, in the shape of a deposit.

Drafts Dated Ahead.
It also appears that when the affairs of the bank were such that the true condition could no longer be hidden, and one of the directors placed his own experts upon the books, the State Banking Department stepped in and determined to close the bank; but that in some mysterious manner word was passed to Henry B. Platt, vice-president of the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland, surety for the State funds, who succeeded in having the State Treasurer and State Comptroller hurry from their homes on Sunday, Oct. 8, 1905, draw two drafts aggregating $50,000, dating them a day ahead, which the State Treasurer personally brought to New York on Sunday night and had presented at the Cooper Exchange Bank Monday morning.

Funds sufficient to pay the demand not being on hand, it appears the bank was permitted to remain open until 8 o'clock in the afternoon to allow it to procure the cash. On the following day the bank was closed and the small depositors stood in the way of losing their all.

State Funds Deposited.
Through the personal application of Mr. Gilman $25,000 out of the "general fund" of the state was deposited with the new bank on Aug. 6, 1905, a month after the bank opened its doors, and $25,000 was added on Oct. 8. Gilman was unable to get more than $20,000 at this time, and the bank officials became uneasy. The Fidelity and Deposit Company, of Maryland, of which Henry B. Platt and Frank Platt, sons of Senator Platt, are, respectively, vice-president and counsel, became surety to the State in the sum of $50,000. In October of that year the bond was reduced to $25,000. It was announced to-day that the depositors will be paid in full.

ULTRA VIOLET RAYS PROVE TO BE A GREAT SUCCESS

Evening World's Experiments Show that No Well Regulated Household or Happy Home Is Complete Without Them.

The Evening World is indebted to Prof. Elmer Gates for his discovery of "ultra violet rays," by which the mind of man becomes not merely an open book but a screen from page. A special commission, went out to-day and peeked into several skulls, which, no matter how thick, revealed their thoughts or lack of thoughts. Not content with the common or garden variety of ultra violet ray, the reporter used a ne plus ultra violet ray which he found in the Equitable Assurance Building sticking through the keyhole of former Vice-President Got Hissen Hyde's office.

As has been explained, Prof. Gates' violets are so wonderful that by simply squirting them about the subject's head a scientist can measure his thoughts, can tell if a person is more sorry to-day than he was yesterday, or if he is thinking harder than he was a half an hour ago. They can be played on two persons sitting side by side and show which has the greater mentality. Also if a man has any thoughts at all.

Some of to-day's results with the ne plus ultra violet rays will give Prof. Gates a jar.

The gray head of William Henry Tillinghast was immersed in the violet bath at his apartment in a popular stopping-place on the river reserved for persons troubled with talking too much on pertinent public questions.

Mr. Tillinghast's brain lobes were working like gelatine moulds shaking in the hands of the cook. He was thinking very hard, very, very violently in fact, much harder than he thought a few months ago. His thoughts seemed to run all in one direction, and the theme and trend of his continuous thought was:

"What's the use? What's the use? What's the use of telling what you know about the trail of corruption leading to the offices of the Metropolitan, if it isn't followed by the man who boasted that he would follow it? What's the use of telling on yourself if the Dizzy Attorney doesn't make any more use of it than to send you to the island? Aw, what's the use?"

Mr. Tillinghast's thoughts partook too much of a monothought, so the experimenter moved on to the Court of Special Sessions, where Justice Joseph M. Deane was sitting with a very unregarded look on his face.

As he did not appear to be planning the garnering of fruits and flowers, the bringing down of coons or a big spree, the ne plus ultra violet rays were directed at him from a safe place, revealing what appeared to be the following thoughts:

"Why should I? Depew and Platt haven't. The law is unconstitutional for me, anyway. Wonder what law is on the books to hold me on the job? It was not like this in the olden days. Why can't a justice have a decent personality? I like to wear this year's natty cut in judicial robes, although they shouldn't be so exposed around

No. 3. THE WORLD'S "GIBSON GALLERY."

(New Gibson heads will be printed in the Morning World and Evening World several days each week. Watch for them. Cut them out for your scrap book.)

READERS may conjecture the story Charles Dana Gibson intended to tell in his picture "The Matinee Girls." Was it a love scene on the stage at the time he caught their faces with his ready pen? Or was it comedy? Or something even more trivial or even more serious? Be that as it may, the Sunday World will give a copy of this picture next Sunday, and the public may draw its own conclusions. The drawing will be presented upon art paper, separate sheet, 10x15, in two printings. A perfect reproduction of one of Mr. Gibson's best pictures. This one cost $1,000, and is one of a series of ten $1,000 pictures being given by the Sunday World.
